

LITTLE DEVIL - STILLS, INFO & MEDIA GALLERY

A feature length comedy-drama film about unconventional friendships.

A mischievous, disabled fag hag absconds to London to find love and opportunity, but finds an unlikely outcome in her life when she hooks up with a washed-up gay male escort.

Alice Gardner (Sam Renke) is a young woman living with brittle bones resulting in a life lacking in romance, sex and something much deeper. Desperate to change her dull existence and achieve her aims, she escapes the suburbs to find opportunities in the big bad city of London and reconnect with a gay crowd from happier times. But instead of falling on her feet, or head over heels in love, she ends up being sucked into a life of decadence, danger and drugs. After a crazy all-night party, she finds herself lonely and unsatisfied so orders in a male escort, Trojan Rocks (Deobia Oparei) in an attempt to satisfy her sexual hunger. But he doesn't turn out to be what she expected, in more ways than one, and the situation becomes more complex when a troubled and unwanted past catches up with Alice.

Dungeness sets scene for film 'striking a blow for diversity'

A new movie shot in Dungeness has just been released.

Little Devil, which came out last week, shows the two lead characters with the Dungeness B nuclear power station in the background and on board a Romney, Hythe and Dymchurch Railway train.

Director Max Barber chose the backdrop for the last act of this comedy drama.

He said: "I was spellbound by Dungeness since I came to make a documentary about the railway some years back.

"I knew it was a one-off location that you can't find anywhere else and also found it quite surreal and other-worldly, something you can usually only get by building sets or using visual effects.

"The miniature railway, the enigmatic geography and imposing power station also reflected some of the themes in our film, which made it the perfect place to shoot the climax."

The shooting at Dungeness took place as long ago as summer 2013 but each stage of filming had to wait for funding.

The film is about a disabled young woman who forms an unorthodox relationship with a troubled, gay male escort.

It is seen a striking a blow for diversity as the disabled character is played by an actress with osteogenesis imperfecta (brittle bones). Co-star DeObia Oparei is black and the film's release coincided with a black actors and directors' boycott of this year's Oscars because the nominees were mostly white.

In fact Little Devil has already received awards at the Los Angeles Diversity Film Festival.

Renke is the first disabled actress to take a debut lead role in a British independent movie and be awarded best lead actress. Oparei appeared as Aroo Hotach in Game of Thrones and also features in this summer's blockbuster sequel Independence Day: Resurgence.

Dungeness is a popular location for filming. In the same year Little Devil was shot there, singer Peter Andre visited for trailers of his reality TV series Peter Andre: My Life. Rock band the Stereophonics have also used the location for video making. Claudia Schiffer for a photoshoot and also Jeremy Clarkson.

LITTLE DEVIL

Made in 2012 and released in 2013, Little Devil was the first feature made by Max Barber who had a string of comedy short films to his name distributed via TV, cable and DVD across Europe and the USA. He teamed up with screenwriter Abraham Papacosta to create the comedy-drama, Little Devil, as a vehicle for a new acting talent: Samantha Renke. Casting her alongside an established actor, DeObia Oparei (Dredd, Game of Thrones, Dumbo & Independence Day: Resurgence) the low-budget film, shot in East London and Kent, went on to gain several awards the following year at The Los Angeles Diversity Film Festival.
